The Koch History Centre

The Koch Historical Centre provides a new institutional home in Oxford for the pursuit of world-class historical research. Funded initially for 5 years, the Centre will receive its first intake of fellows in October 2025.

The Centre aims to promote curiosity-driven humanities research with a strong emphasis on multi- and inter-disciplinary approaches to the study of history. It will offer scholars the time and facilities to undertake fundamental historical study, and its focus will be on supporting the production of innovative historical research while adhering to the best traditions of scholarship.

The Centre will be housed in Wadham College and the Faculty of History which is part of the Humanities Division of the University. It will host scholars with varying levels of experience who work on a wide variety of regions and periods. It will form a community of scholars who will interact fruitfully not only with other fellows but also with colleagues across the College and the University. Fellows will be selected solely on the basis of academic excellence.

Koch Fellowships

The Centre will appoint 3 senior and 9 junior fellows each year. The emphasis on attracting early-career scholars flows from the desire to attract and nurture outstanding researchers, who will shape the field for the next generation.

A different theme will be chosen as the focus for each year, and fellows will work on a project that is related to the subject area selected for that particular year. The themes chosen will be sufficiently broad to encourage applications from scholars who specialise on subjects in all regions and periods, and who bring with them a variety of historical methodologies and fields of expertise.

The Centre is particularly concerned to foster multidisciplinary discussion about different historiographical approaches and methods. It will appoint scholars who can articulate clearly what their interpretive methods are, and whose work engages with the chosen theme in a way that allows them to compare and contrast their own method with other approaches to it. There will be no presumption that any one historical approach is better than any other, and it is expected that a focus on approaches and methods will facilitate fruitful conversation between Centre fellows with disparate historical interests and concerns.

Junior fellowships will be for one year (i.e. 12 months), and will be open to any postdoctoral, early career (tenure track) or tenured academic within 10 years of being awarded their PhD at the time of application (with additional allowance for periods of maternity leave, illness, or other special circumstances). Senior fellowships will also be of one year's duration and will be open to individuals whose PhD was granted more than 10 years before their application.

All fellows will be based at Wadham College, and will benefit from its lively interdisciplinary research culture. The Governing Body of Wadham has 68 members, and apart from the History fellows (see further details below) there are fellows in cognate disciplines, including Medieval and Modern Languages, Philosophy, Anthropology, Economics, Politics, and Asian and Middle Eastern Studies, as well as a substantial body of undergraduate and graduate students reading for degrees in History, and the joint schools with History. A number of current Wadham fellows in other disciplines, such as Environmental Science, engage in conversations and collaboration with colleagues in the humanities and social sciences.

The Centre will host six seminars per eight-week term, which will be held at Wadham College and the Schwarzman Centre for Humanities. The Schwarzman Centre is the new interdisciplinary building for Humanities scholarship in Oxford, which will be inaugurated in September 2025.

All fellows will give one seminar talk during their stay. The weekly seminars will be at the heart of intellectual life at the Centre, and making contributions to the collective discussions of these meetings will form a central element of the fellowship. They will be open to undergraduate, graduate and postgraduate audiences from across the University and will be made accessible to wider audiences as podcasts.

These seminars will be complemented by lectures and seminars given by other speakers, drawn from within, and outside, the university, whose research intersects with the annual theme.

The fellows will also form part of the History Faculty, and will be encouraged to participate in its considerable range of research seminars and lecture series (see further details below). The fellowships are research posts, and they carry no teaching obligation. However, fellows will be strongly encouraged to participate in the academic life of the Faculty and the Schwarzman Centre, both as participants in Faculty seminars and through their interactions with the graduate students and postdoctoral research scholars in the Faculty and elsewhere in the Humanities Division.

Fellows will have full access to the College and University libraries, and to the digital resources available through the Bodleian Library.

Fellowship Theme for 2025-26

The theme chosen for 2025-26 is the historical relationship between Religion and the State. Given the Centre's commitment to attracting historians with expertise in a broad range of periods and cultures, these terms should be understood as widely as possible. For example, 'the State' might refer to a range of different polities and state structures, including societies which did not have a hierarchical form of governance. In a similar way, 'Religion', for example, should be understood to include cases where institutions and practices of belief are formally separated from the aegis of political governance or where religious personnel exercised authority over social, judicial and economic life, or conversely, where temporal authorities exercise control over some or all areas of religious life (including banning any religious activity).

The Centre particularly welcomes applications from scholars whose work contributes to broader discussion of the interaction of religious belief with historical writing. Traditions of historical writing have long been intertwined with religious cultures and with different forms of clerical structure. We intend therefore that the study of these theme will encompass reflection on the ways that historical writing has often been influenced positively and negatively by these religious cultures in many eras.

Terms and Conditions

The junior fellowship will include certain lunching and dining rights at Wadham College which will be confirmed, as well as membership of the Common Room.

Responsibilities

- Conduct world-class independent research based on the theme for the relevant year of the Koch fellowship
- Analyse detailed and complex qualitative and/or quantitative data from a variety of sources, and generate original ideas
- Write book chapters and research articles for peer-reviewed journals
 - Give one seminar talk during the period of the Koch fellowship and contribute to discussions concerning methodological and historiographical topics at the weekly meetings

Selection criteria

Applications will be judged only against the criteria which are set out below. You should make sure that your application shows very clearly how closely your skills and experience meet these criteria. We are committed to fairness, consistency and transparency in selection decisions. Chairs of selection committees will be aware of the principles of equality of opportunity and fair selection and there will be both female and male members of the selection committee. Selection committees will explicitly take into account any career breaks or other factors, such as part-time working or disability, which may have had an impact on the quantity of candidates' publications.

Essential selection criteria

- Hold a relevant PhD/DPhil with post-qualification research experience (postdoctoral, early career (tenure track) or tenured academic within 10 years of being awarded their PhD at the time of application)
- An established (inter)national reputation and publication record
- Possess sufficient specialist knowledge in the discipline to develop research projects and methodologies
- Ability to independently plan and manage a research project,

Pre-employment screening

Standard checks

If you are offered the post, the offer will be subject to standard pre-employment checks. You will be asked to provide: proof of your right-to-work in the UK; proof of your identity; and (if we haven't done so already) we will contact the referees you have nominated. If you have previously worked for the University we will also verify key information such as your dates of employment and reason for leaving your previous role with the department/unit where you worked. You will also be asked to complete a health declaration so that you can tell us about any health conditions or disabilities for which you may need us to make appropriate adjustments.

Please read the candidate notes on the University's pre-employment screening procedures at:

About the University of Oxford

Welcome to the University of Oxford. We aim to lead the world in research and education for the benefit of society both in the UK and globally. Oxford's researchers engage with academic, commercial and cultural partners across the world to stimulate high-quality research and enable innovation through a broad range of social, policy and economic impacts.

We believe our strengths lie both in empowering individuals and teams to address fundamental questions of global significance, while providing all our staff with a welcoming and inclusive workplace that enables everyone to develop and do their best work. Recognising that diversity is our strength, vital for innovation and creativity, we aspire to build a truly diverse community which values and respects every individual's unique contribution.

While we have long traditions of scholarship, we are also forward-looking, creative and cutting-edge. Oxford is one of Europe's most entrepreneurial universities and we rank first in the UK for university spin-outs, and in recent years we have spun out 15-20 new companies every year. We are also recognised as leaders in support for social enterprise.

Join us and you will find a unique, democratic and international community, a great range of staff benefits and access to a vibrant array of cultural activities in the beautiful city of Oxford.

Wadham College

Wadham is one of the larger colleges of the University of Oxford, with approximately 450 undergraduates, 250 graduates, and over 70 Fellows. Founded in 1610 by Nicholas and Dorothy Wadham, Wadham College has a strong commitment to academic values, within a liberal and progressive atmosphere. The College is academically strong, and regularly features in the top ten in the annual ranking of Oxford colleges for academic performance in final examinations.

A particular focus of Wadham College rests on fostering multi- and inter-disciplinary dialogue between scholars whose research interests may cut across formal departmental boundaries. Cooperation and conversation with the fellows of the Centre within this wider academic community is precisely what association with the College is designed to facilitate. Wadham's historical research is characterized by a commitment to interdisciplinary approaches, linking history with literature, philosophy, theology and the social sciences. Wadham has a long and distinguished tradition of historical research and teaching, nurtured by numerous influential scholars throughout its history. Past fellows include Lawrence Stone, whose pioneering work in social history redefined the study of the early modern family and society, and C. S. L. Davies, an expert on late fifteenth- and sixteenth-century politics. Its current fellows are Norman Aselmeyer, a social and urban historian of East Africa, Matthew Kempshall, a historian of medieval political thought and the classical tradition, Tehila Sasson, an historian of economic life in the British empire and the international order, George Southcombe, a historian of early modern religion, literature, and culture, and Robert Yee, an economic and political historian of modern Europe.

Wadham has long been at the forefront of advancing equality of opportunity, and celebrates vigorous debate, independent thought, and academic excellence. The College seeks to create a welcoming, accessible, and secure environment in which to work, study, live, and visit. The collegiate community embraces people of all ages, backgrounds, races/ethnicities, nationalities, beliefs (including religious beliefs), genders, sexualities, dis/abilities, and appearances.

Further information about the College can be obtained from <http://www.wadham.ox.ac.uk>

The Faculty of History

The Faculty of History in Oxford is the largest in the United Kingdom and one of the largest in the world. It has a very strong international reputation for its scholarship and its teaching of undergraduate and graduate students, with particular strengths in the history of the British Isles, continental Europe, imperial and global history, the United States, economic and social history, intellectual history and the history of science, medicine and technology. Within the Faculty there is also a department for the History of Art and a number of dedicated research centres.

The Faculty of History provides a robust and supportive framework for research, including:

- Financial support for research travel, research assistance, and editorial help
- Mentoring, including discussion of research plans and progress
- Internal and interdisciplinary collaborations, through research centres
- Assistance in the formulation of research plans and funding bids

The Faculty enables all its postholders, including departmental lecturers, to request up to £800 per year for research expenses, and makes additional funds available for organising conferences in Oxford. In addition, to assist newly-appointed postholders in the development and publication of their research, Faculty funds are available for early career and established colleagues to hold a workshop at which colleagues can discuss drafts of their next monograph.

The Faculty is located in the Old Boys' High School, George Street. This is a very central location, less than 10 minutes' walk from the rail station, and very close to bus station, shops and other University locations. The premises house a community of around 20 administrative staff and up to 30 other users, comprising doctoral students, researchers, and academics and professors. The building is also used for teaching and seminars.

More information about the Faculty can be found at: www.history.ox.ac.uk.

The Faculty holds a bronze Athena Swan award to recognise advancement of gender equality: representation, progression and success for all.

The Humanities Division

The Humanities Division is one of four academic divisions in the University of Oxford, bringing together the faculties of Classics; English; History; Linguistics, Philology and Phonetics; Medieval and Modern Languages; Music; Asian and Middle Eastern Studies; Philosophy; and Theology and Religion, as well as the Ruskin School of Art. The Division has more than 500 members of academic staff, approximately 4,100 undergraduates (more than a third of the total undergraduate population of the University), 1,000 postgraduate research students and 720 students on postgraduate taught courses.

The Division offers world-class teaching and research, backed by the superb resources of the University's libraries and museums, including the famous Bodleian Libraries, with their 11 million volumes and priceless early book and manuscript collections, and the Ashmolean Museum of Art and Archaeology. Such historic resources are linked to innovative agendas in research and teaching, with an increasing emphasis on interdisciplinary study. Our faculties are among the largest in the world, enabling Oxford to offer an education in Arts and Humanities unparalleled in its range of subjects, from music and fine art to ancient and modern languages.
